PROGRAM ARCHITECTURE

The program is built around recovery of high-leverage points.

Obsidian does not sell isolated tutoring hours. Each week is tied to the student's Obsidian Score Profile, current performance leaks, and the next timed execution decision.

01-02	Stabilise the profile	Confirm the student's current score pattern, identify priority leaks, and set the first private performance protocol.
03-04	Recover controllable points	Target timing instability, retrieval weakness, translation errors, and repeatable decision mistakes under timed conditions.
05-07	Build section-level execution	Move from drills to timed section work, with weekly analysis of attention drift, pacing, and accuracy under pressure.
08-09	Simulate test-day decisions	Use full or partial simulations to rehearse skip rules, answer-change rules, endurance, and recovery after uncertainty.
10	Final strategy review	Convert the evidence into a test-day execution plan and parent-facing recommendation for the next SAT decision.

THE OPERATING SYSTEM

Private tutoring inside a managed performance system.

Tutors deliver sessions inside the Obsidian system. Obsidian owns the score profile, weekly protocol, reporting rhythm, and parent strategy conversation.

01

Private tutoring

Assigned tutors deliver high-touch preparation against a documented weekly protocol.

02

Obsidian Intelligence

Performance data is reviewed for timing, accuracy, load, decision pattern, and pressure-related change.

03

Timed simulation

Practice escalates from targeted drills into controlled timed execution and test-day rehearsal.

04

Parent reporting

Families receive clear updates on what is changing, what remains at risk, and what decision comes next.

A single documented communication channel.

Parents, tutors, and the Obsidian team operate through one managed channel for continuity, safeguarding, service quality, and clarity.
